

People Eater

With more than 5,000 homes damaged or destroyed, no electrical power available and cellular towers down, among the biggest challenges was locating the dispersed population. Hundreds of people were listed as missing for more than a week. Family and friends across the nation were desperate to make contact.

Within less than 18 hours, we developed an online tool — built from a simple Google document — that allowed anyone to list the name, last known location and other identifying information for someone they were seeking, or, if they wanted to be found, to post information on how they could be contacted. Within the first 24 hours, 366 names had been added by the public. The list grew to 1,587 names. We published the information in print as well, and distributed free newspapers at shelters and aid stations.
